THE DEMOCRAT DEATH CULT

Tana Toraja, Sulawesi, Indonesia.

There couldn't be a more appropriate and exotic place to discuss death cults than here. In the distant highlands of central Sulawesi undiscovered by any Westerner until little over a century ago, are a people called the Toraja who take propitiation of their deceased ancestors to a limit unmatched anywhere else.

They bury the dead in wooden coffins attached to vertical cliffs or in cliffside caves which collapse with age with the bones spilling out.

They propitiate them with effigies on ledges of the cliffs.

While their homes are wood, thatch, and bamboo architectural wonders.

Yet most interestingly, the Toraja have combined their ancestor worship with a devout Christianity.

Tana Toraja (the Land of the Toraja) is a Christian haven within the world's largest Islamic population. Churches here are as plentiful as mosques elsewhere in Indonesia, while a giant statue of Christ towers above Tana Toraja high on a mountaintop.

The Toraja have lived here for millennia with a culture far older than Islam. They fought and defeated coastal peoples who tried to force Islam upon them over the past several centuries. When Dutch missionaries – recall that Indonesia was created as the Dutch East Indies – brought Christianity to them in the early 1900s, they embraced it as Islam's competitor while retaining their ancient ceremonies of ancestor worship.

The Toraja are a people with deep pride and confidence in the worth of their culture. If there were anyone among them who lacked that pride and confidence, who felt ashamed and apologetic of their culture, they would be despised. If that someone felt so ashamed and apologetic that they wished and worked for their culture's destruction, they would be regarded as demented.

There are such people among us, among our fellow Americans. Rather than their fellow Americans looking upon them as morally contemptible and mentally deficient, however, they have been allowed to seize control of almost every major institution in America, from the media, to academia, to government, to almost every aspect of American culture you care to name.

There is a name for these people: Democrats. And it is critically important to understand something fundamental about them.

Yes, they are crooks who excuse their criminality with anti-capitalism. Since it is "unfair" and "unequal" for some to be wealthier than others, the only way the wealthy gained their wealth was by ripping others off, so it's moral to steal from them.

Yes, they are fascists whose goal is power over others, who excuse their fascism with the Marxist morality of the end justifies the means. Thus any smear of an opponent, any lie, any cheating and rigging elections is morally justified in order that they maintain and expand their power.

Yet more fundamental than their being crooks and fascists is this: Democrats are a Death Cult. Everything they do has as its primary goal the ruination and extinction of America as a nation, a society, a people, and a culture. We are surrounded by glaring overt examples, from how are kids are being educated to how our military is being transgendered.

We've been surrounded by such examples every day since the Democrat Death Cult's apotheosis was elected president in 2008, then reelected via vote fraud in 2012 – and tragically the examples will continue into the foreseeable future.

That's because the rejection of the Democrat Death Cult by millions of Americans has been one of inchoate rage rather than principle.

Thus we have a candidate who symbolizes that rage with no solution. The only solution is the moral and legal principles embodied in the Constitution, combined with a candidate possessing both a thorough understanding of them and the unswervable determination to apply them once more to our federal government.

We almost had such a candidate. The candidate we have ended up with possesses neither. If you want a historical example of the difference, the American Revolution was based on principle, the French Revolution was based on rage.

No, we are not going to get a government by guillotine and Napoleon. We are going to get more of the same we've got now, because the Democrat Death Cult has ensured its continuing rule. Rage is ultimately impotent. It can only destroy, not create.

To take down the Democrat Death Cult, there must be a clear positive morally principled and legally defensible alternative. We don't have it – yet. Pray to Providence that someday we may acquire it. Until we choose to do so, we must continue to reap the whirlwind.
