AMERICA'S CASTRATED GENERALS AND CUCKOLDED EXPERTS

If Donald J. Trump is re-elected to a second term as president, will that victory finally be enough to break the back of a military and policy "elite" who have surrendered to the anti-American mobs and the Democrat Party who made them possible?

It's a good question. Here's more.

Who does our military serve?

Are they subordinated to some ineffable "conventional wisdom" about justice and racial harmony? Do they march to the beat of a "politically correct" agenda defined by the organizations like Black Lives Matter, Antifa, or to the nostrums of ivy league grandees?

Are their concepts of operations inspected and approved for their "egalitarian" content by CNN and the New York Times? Or are they under the command of the citizen America elects to hold the rank of their commander-in-chief?

Do we still have civilian control over the military in America and are our services still loyal to the Constitution?

Or have our generals and admirals decided to mutiny in favor of those who hate the "deplorables" and Donald Trump, the man Americans chose to lead our country and command our military?

Since scores of cities have seen violence in the wake of the killing of George Floyd, the actions of several active duty and retired senior officers indicate we have a real crisis within the most powerful military superstructure mankind has ever seen.

Something must be done about that crisis now.

George Floyd should be alive today and there is no reasonable justification for how he was killed at the hands of the Minneapolis police. While he had an extensive and violent criminal record, the manner of his arrest and subsequent death rightly have led to criminal charges against the officers involved.

But the violence that has erupted across scores of cities since his arrest have nothing to do with Floyd or how much black lives matter.

As sober observers of all pigmentations have noted again and again, exactly nine unarmed black men were shot and killed last year at the hands of American police. Nine out of a population of 330 million, in a nation with 17,000 police agencies and more than 600,000 sworn peace officers.

Twice that number were killed in one day in Chicago recently, without one Black Lives Matter protest.

At the same time, were there in fact "systemic racism" among our police forces, it seems that that racism is against Caucasian suspects, who are twice as likely to be shot than black suspects.

America is not a racist nation. Period. In fact, we are the only country to have gone to war with itself over the issue of racism in a war that killed more than all our casualties in World War I, World War II, and Vietnam combined.

Yes, America does have racists. All countries do, just as they all have murderers, thieves, and fraudsters. But for more than two generations America's institutions have made it illegal to be racist and to systematically discriminate on that basis, such that our 44th president was of mixed race, with a white mother and black African father. That doesn't happen in a racist country.

Systematically racist nations to still exist—just try apply for a white-collar job in Marseilles with a North African or Muslim name, or apply for a position of importance in the British Labour Party as a Jew — but America is not one of them.

Yet the most senior U.S. naval officer, Michael M. Gilday, a man in charge of a dozen nuclear aircraft carriers, 60 submarines, 300 ships and our plans to wage war with China, Iran, or Russia, saw fit to record a five-minute "Message to Fleet" video wearing full combats and decrying institutional racism in America and her Navy.

At the same time, in his commencement speech to the highest institution of military education, National Defense University—where, for full disclosure, I taught for five-and-a-half years—our highest-ranking officer, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs Mark Milley, felt compelled to make an apology.

He apologized not because the Army has been found to have fallen short in its combat readiness, or because of a failure to provide the requisite support to the president, his only boss, but because Milley says he shouldn't have been photographed with the president in public.

What was the egregious sin committed by the general in his own estimation? Was he photographed in blackface or wearing a Klan hood like the Democratic governor of Virginia? Was he caught trying to grope a sleeping female journalist like Democratic Senator Al Franken?

Neither. He simply stood next to his commander outside the D.C. church, located one block from the White House, that anarchist rioters had tried to burn down, after the area had been cleared by the U.S. Park Police using smoke grenades and pepper spray. Let me repeat that: smoke and pepper spray. Not machine guns and bayonets.

For just a moment, before we move on to the fundamental issue of how Admiral Gilday's and General Milley's actions make a mockery of their military and constitutional duties, not to mention the utterly cowardly and disgraceful behavior of General Jim Mattis, former Marine and secretary of defense to President Trump, let me ask you another disturbing question:

How do our enemies look at America after Gilday's pandering to BLM talking points and Milley's apology for having been seen to support the restoration of order on the streets of the nation's capital?

Do the People's Liberation Army of China and the Chinese Communist Party it serves see us as capable of countering their remilitarization of the Asia Pacific region?

Does the obeisance to radicals of our highest-ranking officers make the mullahs feel better about their plans to attack our forces or set down the Straits of Hormuz?

And is Vladimir Putin, the hard-bitten, erstwhile KGB officer impressed by the highest representatives of the U.S. military genuflecting at the altar of political correctness run amok?

So why have almost 20 Americans been killed on America's streets since George Floyd's death? Why have hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of damage been done to hundreds and hundreds of businesses, many of them minority-owned?

And how has Washington state so lost control of its territory that Seattle now has an "autonomous zone" patrolled by armed anarchists as the Democrat governor laughs about it all?

Quite simply because the "long march through the institutions" by those who replaced dreams of Communist revolution with cultural Marxism has borne fruit. The Alinskyite strategy to eschew a frontal assault on Western values and American culture and traditions and replace it with subversion from the inside of established institutions such as the news media, Hollywood, and our schools, actually worked.

Andrew Breitbart was right, politics is downstream from culture, but so is the U.S. military and the incestuous clique of talking heads who constitute the "expert" policy class in Washington, D.C., and thanks to Mattis, Milley, and Gilday, the depth of their corruption is finally clear for all to see.

In truth, their utter failure and moral bankruptcy should have been just as obvious.

Just choose any significant policy decision from the last 50 years. From Kissinger convincing President Nixon that it would be good for America to normalize relations with Communist China, to economic "experts" justifying the export of American manufacturing jobs overseas because, well, stuff would be cheaper.

From criminally naïve neoconservatives telling George W. Bush that if we invaded Iraq, American troops would be welcomed as "liberators," to Obama's A Team deciding that releasing $140 billion dollars to a theocratic regime that wishes America dead would "balance" the Middle East, there is nary a decision that this fetid city made that actually served the people of America.

All of this explains why we chose a non-politician for president in 2016. Now to repeat the question:

If Donald J. Trump is reelected to a second term as president, will that victory finally be enough to break the back of a military and policy "elite" who have surrendered to the anti-American mobs and the Democrat Party who made them possible?

Let's hope so. But to find out, first we need to get him reelected.

Sebastian Gorka is the former Deputy Assistant to the President for President Trump. He is reported to be considered for Director of Voice of America.
